

Dining with the STARS

Food Network chefs own restaurants across the country. Here's your go-to guide:

ILLUSTRATIONS BY MICHAEL A. HILL

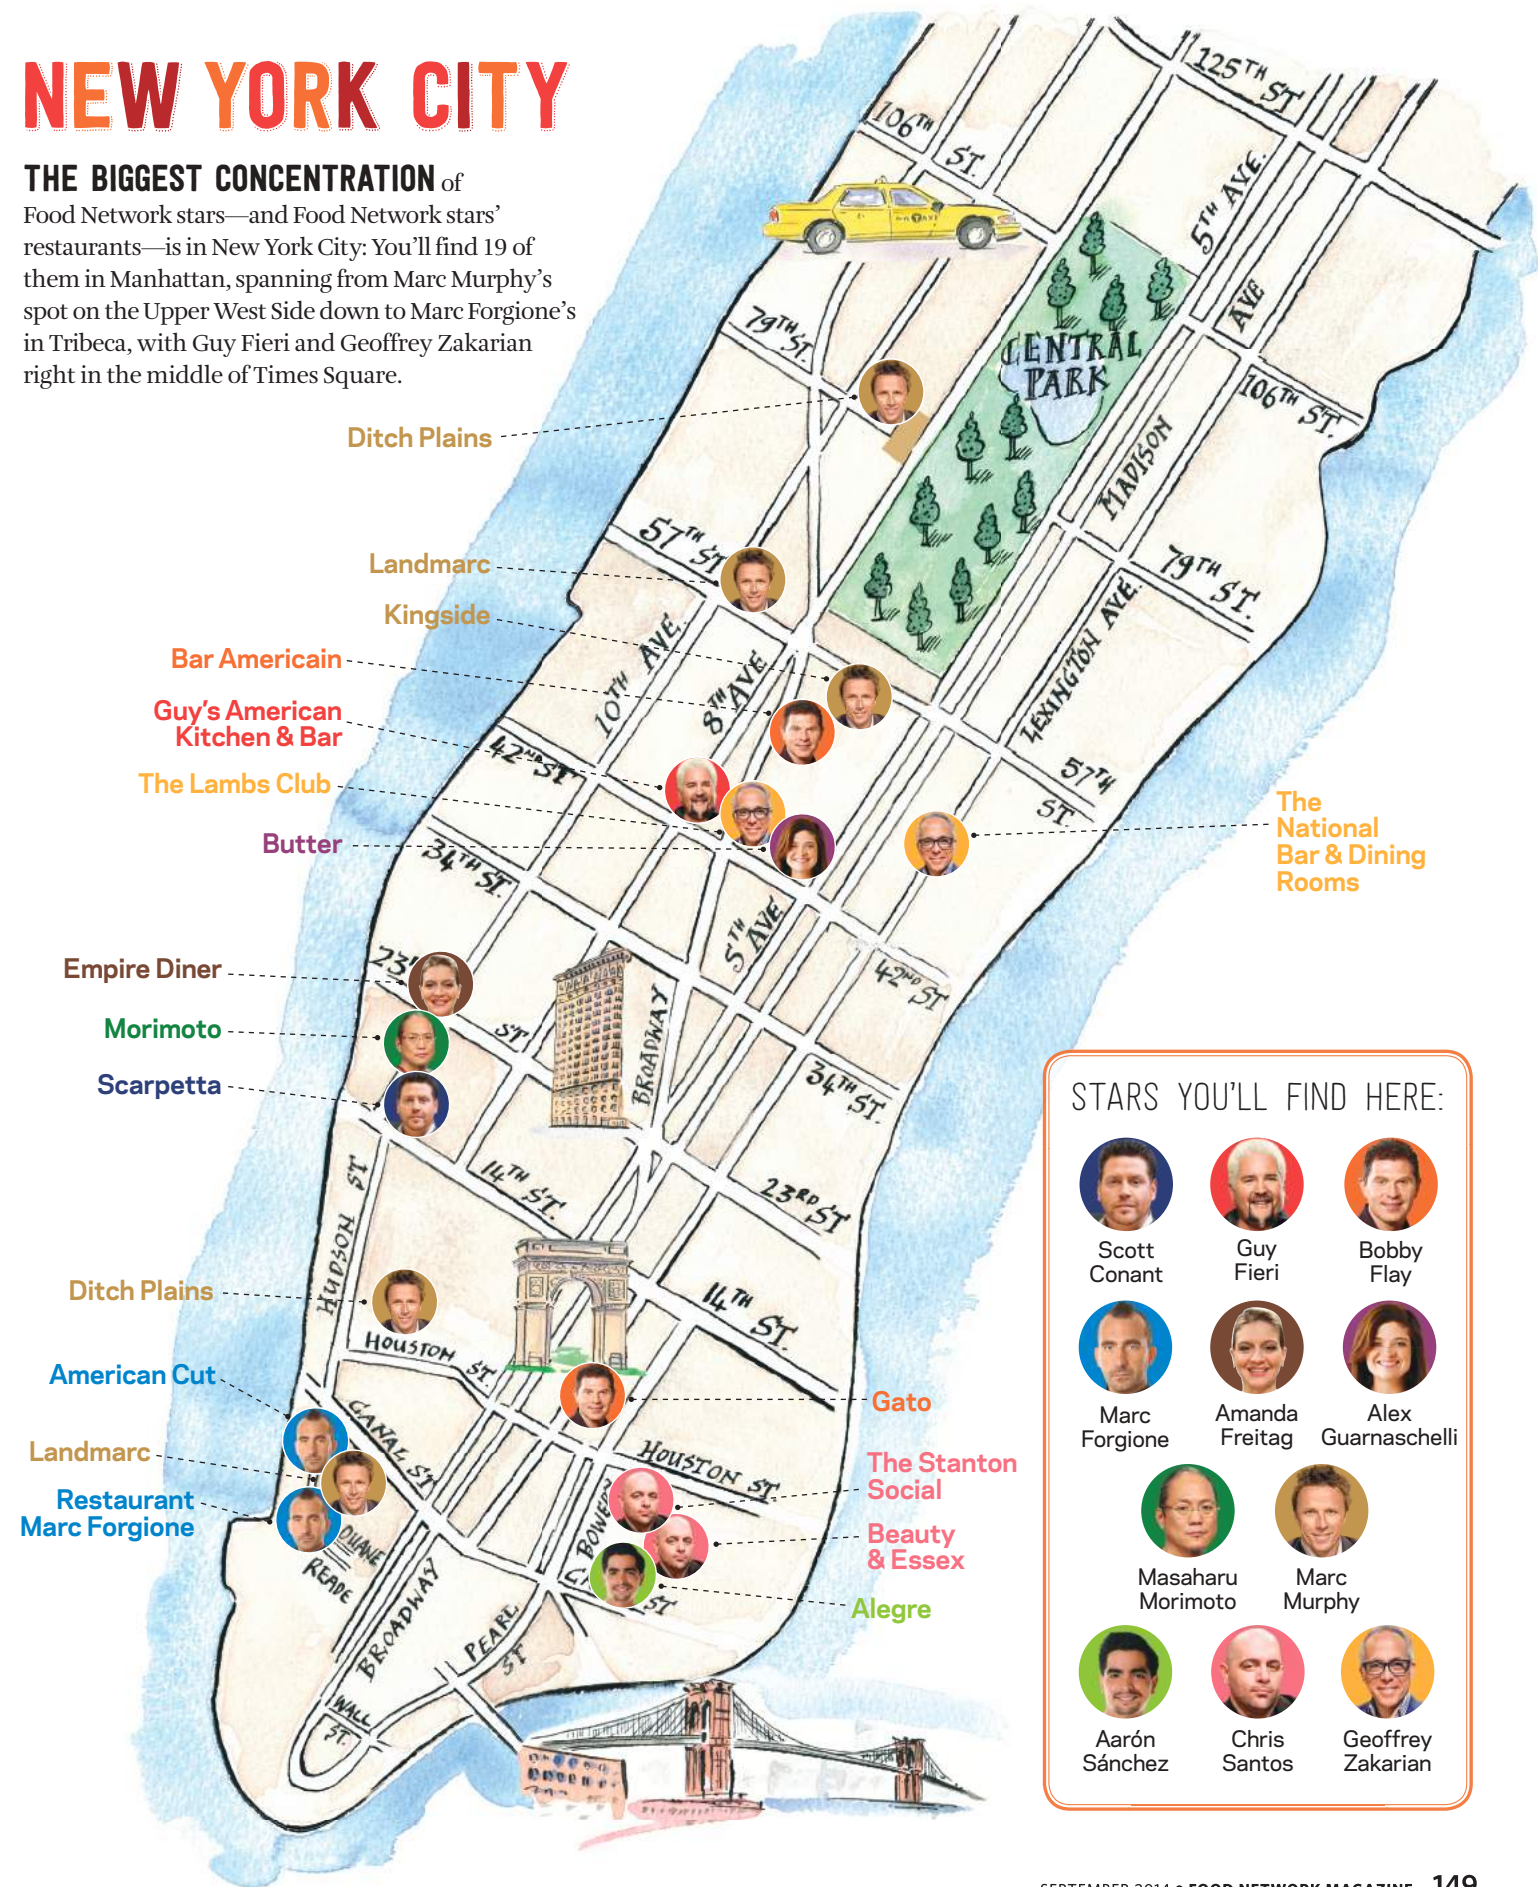

READERS ARE ALWAYS ASKING us about the stars' restaurants, and we realized that, although we cover them often, we've never taken stock of the whole collection. When we were creating the list, we were shocked to discover that Bobby Flay's empire has grown to a whopping 24 restaurants (his latest, Gato, is one of the hottest spots in New York City) and that Iron Chef Jose Garces owns 18 restaurants, two of which are opening right about now. The big news keeps coming: Giada De Laurentiis has opened her first place in Las Vegas, Aarón Sánchez is bringing his small-bite version of Mexican food to Baltimore, and Masaharu Morimoto will have another new restaurant by the end of 2014. The stars' restaurants are now spread across the country, but the largest clusters are in New York City, Las Vegas and Northern California. Take a look...

NEW YORK CITY

THE BIGGEST CONCENTRATION of Food Network stars—and Food Network stars' restaurants—is in New York City: You'll find 19 of them in Manhattan, spanning from Marc Murphy's spot on the Upper West Side down to Marc Forgione's in Tribeca, with Guy Fieri and Geoffrey Zakarian right in the middle of Times Square.

LAS VEGAS

BIG NAME CHEFS, including Bobby Flay, have been flocking to Vegas for decades, and this year three more Food Network stars are joining the mix. Guy Fieri recently opened Vegas Kitchen & Bar in The Quad, Giada has entered the restaurant business for the first time with her namesake place in The Cromwell, and Morimoto is slated to open Morimoto Las Vegas at The Mirage later this year.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

GUY FIERI is the Golden State's golden boy—the Santa Rosa-based chef has eight restaurants between San Jose and Sacramento. Tyler Florence sticks a little closer to his home in Mill Valley, just north of San Francisco: He owns El Paseo there with former Van Halen rocker Sammy Hagar, plus Wayfare Tavern in the city.
